Before the call began, Samuel White recorded himself in his RV on the Oregon coast. He was nervous. He said so directly, on camera, to no one. He hoped Allison Watson might be on his side. He knew she was part of the system. He took a breath and told himself to be ready.
He was already recording.

[0:01 — 0:28]

"I'm a little bit nervous but I'll be fine. I'm going to record the call so that I can transcribe it and share it with AI. Hopefully things go well. Hopefully she's a little bit on my side. I know that she's part of the system. Take a deep breath and be ready for this."

This is the man Allison Watson called on March 25, 2025. Not the man she would construct on that call. Not the man whose systemic analysis she would label apocalyptic thinking. Not the man she would claim feared [Volunteer Services Lead] wanted to kill him.

This man. Nervous. Honest. Hoping for good faith. Already documenting.

Twenty-two seconds of silence follow.

Then:

[0:50 — 1:00]

"It's very stressful. Here we go."

Then her voice.
