[Program Manager],

This is my final communication to you.

On March 27, 2025, you issued a permanent, system-wide expulsion from Oregon State Parks volunteer programs and explicitly stated in writing that the basis for that expulsion was my public speech about abuse by OPRD staff.

You did not allege misconduct.

You did not allege safety concerns.

You did not allege failure of duty.

You documented retaliation for protected speech, under color of law.

That violation has now continued for 314 days.

Your continued silence does not insulate you. It establishes notice, deliberate indifference, and ongoing harm.

Each additional day the expulsion remains in effect compounds the violation.

Your action has foreclosed my ability to participate in state volunteer programs and materially interferes with my ability to pursue employment or service with Oregon state agencies without explaining a retaliatory expulsion that you authored.

You have the ability to undo this. You have chosen not to.

If the expulsion is not rescinded, I will file a civil rights action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983. I will not represent myself. I will seek full relief available under law, including damages, fees, and injunctive remedies. This matter will not be resolved informally once filed.

This is not a request.

It is notice.

The next communication you receive from me will be through counsel or service of process.

Correction and Clarification

March 26, not March 27.

Accuracy matters. I correct the record where necessary.

I want to be clear about my position.

[Program Manager]'s dismissal email, standing alone, satisfies every element of liability under 42 U.S.C. §1983.

It does so independently, without reliance on inference, testimony, or institutional context.

That letter will define the scope of my initial claim. Nothing more is required.

However, the actions — and inactions — of others after notice will be addressed separately. Each of you was given the opportunity to correct a documented constitutional violation. Each of you chose silence.

Silence does not neutralize liability. It compounds it.

This correction is entered for the record.
