Mr. Albert,

I have added a page to the archive that maps every seat in this record, from the park to the Governor's office: what each role is meant to do, and what each one actually did. I measured every one against its own record, and I believe I measured them fairly.

Your office is the last card on the page:

I am an honest, direct, plain sort of man, so I hope you'll indulge me a moment:

I don't pretend to know your function. I don't pretend to know your ethics. I don't pretend to have studied your office closely. Therefore I have no attachment to, or expectation of, any particular outcome by reaching out to you.

This has been my exact position with every party in this record. And I have spent more than a year documenting the choices each of them made.

I am sorry it falls to you to stand at the end of something that grew from the smallest of origins. And I look forward to your next response, with nothing decided about it in advance.
